SOFTWARE ENGINEER

Hi,

I'm a computer science student at the University of Nairobi, I'll be graduating on 22nd September this year. I have interest in the activities that you do at your company and I would like to work with you.

Chances are you expect to work with someone who teaches children because of well... "young minds are awesome, they are the future, they are fun". But here are my reasons why I would like to teach for some time:

Therapy. No, I am not going to release trauma on children... It's just that teaching feels therapeutic.

I would not want children to think tech is for money, or tech is hard, or tech is always competitive. I would like them to see tech as a means to satisfy their curiosities about the world. Tech is not all business and professionalism. The fun part comes first, then the rest.

When I look back at my development style, I attribute it to books that I read outside class. Books written by authors who did not treat tech in a "textbook" way. I would like to do that for others.

warm regards,

Kiarie
